American Quilts Compelling
Art?" Forum

On Thursday, November 11 at 6:00 p.m., the Everhart welcomes art collector David Whaley, whose collection comprises Bold Independence, for a special presentation entitled "What Makes African American Quilts Compelling Art? A Conversation with Collector David Whaley and Everhart Museum Executive Director Kathy Johnson Bowles."

Whaley and Bowles unpack the appeal of the works' bold designs, colors, patterns, and improvisational construction as well as background information about the artists, their works, and their life circumstances. These artists endured incredible hardships, poverty, and injustice while making art that is now revered around the world. Whaley and Bowles also explore examples of visual traditions handed down from the artists' ancestors enslaved from Africa.

MEET

Everhart Museum Welcomes New Folk Arts Coordinator, Shanice Edwards

The Everhart welcomes Folk Arts Coordinator Shanice Edwards. Her work focuses on preserving traditional art forms in the Northeastern Pennsylvania region by documenting the work of active traditional and folk artists. The program, supported by the Pennsylvania Council on the Arts (PCA) through the Everhart's and PCA's Folk and Traditional Arts Partnership, promotes and celebrates the diverse heritage of the region by connecting artists to the community.

Edwards brings with her experience in education through her previous position as a teaching artist for AmeriCorps ArtistYear, partnering with Bayard Taylor Elementary in Philadelphia. There, she delivered an issue-based arts curriculum that supported the school's community and culture and brought artistry and positive messages to the district. "It brought me joy to touch students' lives, inspire staff, and leave a visible stamp on the school's community and culture," says Edwards.

Edwards believes her thoughtfulness, reflectiveness, and collaborative abilities with individuals, staff, and community members will yield great results. "I hope my vision and contributions address the areas of need and support the goals set for this year for the Partnership."
